When it comes to protecting community associations, many of us are used to looking for the usual risks: is the community's equipment properly maintained, are the people we're hiring to work in our community trustworthy, do we have enough insurance and reserves to meet any emergency? However, cyber theft is one of the greatest emerging threats facing community associations and businesses in general. As more and more information and transactions become electronic, this threat increases. Come learn the nature of this insidious threat to your funds. What should you be doing to protect your community?

ALAN CRANDALL is an award winning speaker who will help you find out how to identify and combat the cyber threat. Alan served in the US Army as an electronic warfare analyst and has 25 years experience specializing in community association banking. He's a founding member of the Association of Professional Reserve Analysts, been a realtor, held an insurance license, worked as a community manager, owned his own management company, volunteered as a community association trade organization board member and educational instructor.
